In the Time of the Butterflies

Chapter 12: Minerva
August to November 25, 1960

House Arrest (257-8)

- Those first few weeks at home took some getting used to. The overload was too much.
- The phone ringing, a visitor dropping by, _____ dropping by, children wanting their shoelaces tied, the phone ringing again.
- I would seek the quiet of the bedroom and lie under the sheets.
- I had been so much stronger and braver in prison. Now at home I was _____.

Memories (258-9)

- I grew stronger gradually.
- But sometimes a certain slant of _____ would send me back.
- Once, Minou got a piece of pipe and was rattling it. It was a sound recalling _____.
- I ran out and yanked the pipe from her hand, screaming, "No!"

Pena and the Letter (260-1)

- Pena reminded us how lucky we were. He said, "El Jefe has not visited our province for a while now."
- Of course not, I thought. Most families in Salcedo had at least one son or daughter or _____ still in prison.
- Pena said, "It would be nice if you composed a letter of thanks for his leniency."
- Dede said, "Yes, that would be _____. I mean nice."

The Fight (261)

- "What harm could a letter do?" Mate argued.
- People look to us to be an _____. We have a responsibility, I spoke fiercely.
- "You know if he publishes the silly thing, everyone will know why we wrote it," Patria said.
- What convinced me: Patria's argument that the letter might help _____ the men and soften El Jefe's heart.
- "Someone needs less principles and more sense," Dede murmured.

Viva Trujillo (262-3)

- Two _____ were sitting on our rockers.
- "Remember, you are guards, not guests here. Good night, then."
- "Viva Trujillo!" one of them called out.
- Dede called "Viva Trujillo!"
- "Viva Trujillo!" Mate took it up.
- "Viva—" I began and felt ashamed as I pronounced the _____ name.

Elsa and Roberto Suarez (263-4)

- My old friend Elsa married the journalist Roberto.
- He had been held in prison once for three days—printed a picture of Trujillo's bare _____.
- In a misprint he hadn't caught, Roberto was put in jail for a _____.
- In the midst of my struggle, Elsa, friendly, sprang to my side.

Viva La Mariposa (264-5)

- "The OAS has imposed sanctions! C _____ P _____ E _____, B _____, V _____." Elsa counted them off.
- "Even the gringos have broken relations!" she said.
- "Dede tells me I shouldn't talk to you about this. But I said to her, it's in Minerva's _____."
- "Remember how you shot Trujillo in the play, freed your father's rabbits."
- I didn't feel the same as before prison.
- She grabbed my hands, whispered "Viva la Mariposa!"

Dede's Warning (265-6)

- Our spirits were so high.
- Dede sat by, watching our preparations with displeasure. "You're exposing yourselves to an accident by going down all together," she said. "Think how many _____ you'd be leaving behind."
- We burst out laughing.
- "If you think I'm going to sit by and watch you all _____, you're wrong."

Visiting Manolo in Prison (266-7)

- The prison atmosphere was bright with hope.
- Manolo was not convinced.
- I noticed for the first time that some of his front _____ were broken off.
- Manolo leaned towards me, a _____ to mask our conversation. He said, "Our cells, are they ready?"
- He didn't know that the revolution was out of our hands. I hated to tell him I didn't know.
- "This could be a plant. Find out who's left," he said.

Minerva's Struggle (267-8)

- We were watched around the _____.
- Manolo didn't know the _____ life I was leading—outward, calm, courageous. Inside, a different woman.
- The struggle with her began. You must gather up the broken threads and tie them together.

The Resistance (268)

- Trujillo was doing the crazy things of a trapped _____.
- One morning, the sound of sirens, trucks full of soldiers. Something was wrong.
- Young men had run, distributing leaflets, urging an uprising. Every last one had been _____.

Visiting La Victoria Prison (268-9)

- The men looked thinner, their eyes desperate.
- "It's over for us," Manolo clutched my hands.
- The same grim news from Pedrito and Leandro.
- The men in their cells were being taken out at night in small groups and _____.
- Our driver looked in his rearview mirror, "the _____ are sad today," he noted.
- I sat up and dried my tears. The butterflies were not about to give up! I began to work and the old Minerva I set free.

Leaving Prison (269-70)

- We could see them behind us, following.
- Rufino had become our favorite _____. He said, "You think I'll let anything happen to the _____? They'll have to kill me first!"
- The men were told they would be going on a little trip—what prisoners were told before they were _____.

Visiting Delia (269-70)

- Delia is a female doctor, we have reason to see her.
- "We came about our cycles, is there any activity in our old _____?" Delia said. "The _____ in your systems have atrophied and are dead."
- "Give your bodies a rest," she said, "Wait until next year."
- "Who's left," I asked.
- She wrote down a _____.

Making an Appointment with Dr. Pedro Vinas (271-2)

- The name, Dr. Pedro Vinas. We were suspicious, a stranger probably meant a _____ plant.
- Don Bernardo banished our doubts. Dr. Vinas was a urologist in Santiago.
- I called him. "What is the problem?" he asked. "Just a little one."
- Permission from Pena was next. "The rules clearly state, no contact with political."
- Patna swiftly cut in, "You have been very _____ to us."
